THE TEXT

In a village there lived a merchant who sold salt. Every morning he would put bags full of salt on his donkey's back. Then, they would go to the town to sell them. To reach the town, the merchant and his donkey crossed a small river.

One day the donkey accidentally fell into the water and the salt bags fell, too. As a result, the salt dissolved into the water and disappeared and the bags became light. This made the donkey happy. Then, the donkey started falling into the water daily.

The merchant understood the donkey's trick. He decided to teach it a lesson. After a few days, he took bags full of cotton on the donkey's back. The donkey again fell into the water thinking they would become light. However, the wet cotton became heavy and the donkey had a hard time carrying them.

But it learnt a lesson. It stopped playing tricks on the merchant. The merchant was happy again.
