

The Text

- 1- Shopping centers are dangerous places for nine-year-old Bean. “She is severely allergic to latex*,” explains her mother Lisa Bean, 32, from Kent.
- 2- “Balloons are lethal for my daughter because they release small particles of latex. When one of them touches her face or she breathes it in, her body itches and she has difficulty in breathing, which could be fatal.”
- 3- Lisa noticed that her daughter had some kind of allergy when she was two years old. She had just got out of the bathroom when her whole body began to swell up. She was crying and rolling around on the carpet because she was itching so much.” Lisa and her husband Peter rushed Jaymie to the doctor but he had no idea what had caused the reaction. And as time went on, Jaymie’s allergic reactions got steadily worse.
- 4- “We kept food diaries and had allergic tests done but we didn’t find out,” says Lisa. It was not until last year that Lisa finally discovered the cause. Jaymie and a friend had been playing with a balloon when suddenly her face began to swell. “Did the balloon touch your face?” Lisa asked her. “Yes, only once,” Jaymie replied. “It suddenly dawned on me that she might have latex allergy,” says her mother Lisa. Jaymie was immediately tested and the result was positive. “We had to throw out anything with latex,” says her mom.
- 5- So far, everyone has been supportive. Teachers keep rubbers away from her and are trained to give her first-aid in case of a shock. And if she is invited to a birthday party, her friends make sure in advance that there are no balloons around so that Jaymie does not have to miss out on any party.
- 6- “I am sure that people who do not know Jaymie may think I am irrational when I tell them that a balloon could be fatal to my daughter,” says Lisa. “At home and at school, Jaymie is safe but when we go out, we have to be constantly alert – my child’s life is at risk”.
