I- READING COMPREHENSION (12 marks)

THE TEXT

- 1- Andrea Goldshaw gets up at 5 a.m, studies for three hours and then goes to work. She is in the second year of a law course with Nottingham University, studying under its distance learning programme. It is hard work combining study, paid work and motherhood, but Andrea has a very personal reason for wanting to change career.
- 2- Until a few years ago, she was a teaching assistant, living with her husband and children in Wales. "I was a victim of domestic violence, fled my home with my children and ended up in a refuge," she says, "I didn't qualify for legal aid in the case against my husband but was given some crucial advice. Now I want to become a lawyer specializing in domestic violence – but my real desire is to give advice so that I can give back what was given to me."
- 3- Andrea completed her early childhood studies degree while in the refuge and then got a place on the Nottingham course. She now earns an income as a part-time Freedom Programme facilitator, working with women experiencing domestic violence as well as working as a debt counsellor. "Distance learning has been really hard in many ways, but because I'm passionate about what I want to do, I keep going on," she says.
- 4- Andrea's circumstances might be an unusual motivation to study, but her drive and commitment to change her life are common among those heading back to university or college in their 40's and even older. The vast majority of those studying through distance learning have financial and personal commitments and cannot afford to give up paid work to study on campus.
